Biographical Note

James Ward Seabrook was the fifth (5) President of FSU from July 1933 to June 1956, when he became President Emeritus. He began his higher education at the Presbyterian Parochial school in Sumter, South Carolina, where he was born (Nov. 6, 1886) and reared. After his graduation from school, he attended the Harbison Institute of Abbeville. He next enrolled at Biddle where he was graduated as first honor student of his class with an A.B. degree in 1909. While at Biddle, he was a member of the Y, manager of an athletic team, commandant of the school military unit and editor of the "The Argus", the school paper. After his graduation, he taught for three years at the Slater State Normal School at Winston-Salem. His next educational position was at Kittrell College, which he remained for one year, after which he was elected to the faculty of JCSU. In 1923 James Ward Seabrook became Dean of Fayetteville State Normal. His studies were interrupted by the World War I, during which time he served his country in Washington at Howard University with the student army training corps and as an instructor at the military detachment at Charlotte. In continuing his studies Prof. James W. Seabrook took post graduate work at New York University, where he received his M.A. and passed the matriculation examination for the Ph.D. The Ped.D (Honoris Causa) was awarded by Johnson C. Smith University. While in Washington, he was appointed as a member of President Hoover's White House Conference on Child Health and Protection. He was a member of the Advisory Committee on Negro Education of the U.S. Office of Education having been appointed by Secretary Wilbur of the Department of the Interior. Prof. James Seabrook was a Trustee of Johnson C. Smith University and he served as Vice President of the North Carolina Teachers Association of Teachers in Colored Schools and was on the Executive Committee of the N.C. Interracial Commission. He also was a member of the American Legion.
